This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`

The distant Infinite reveals,
Lighthouses on the sea of life—
Our womanhood's ideals.
To-day, like candles in our hands,
We find these deep and close appeals
That strong lives make with healing truth.

Athletics

Athletic Association

We asked them for a running track
But firm they stood and would not yield
Because, they said, a track would spoil
The beauty of the Athletic Field.

Vassar College Chapter

Of the

College Settlement Association

Behold the germ of a Spotless Town
Among the buildings, dingy and brown
It stands the Great Unwashed to Cleanse
And all their woes it surely mends.
To sanitate each tenement
Is the fervent hope of "The Settlement."

Daughters of the Revolution

Ye see the daughters set down here
Wi' pedigrees and a' that,
They count back full a hundred year.
But are they mair for a' that?
For a' that and a' that,
Their family trees and a' that,
The man of independent mind
He looks and laughs at a' that.

Concerning Clubs

A CLUB, Hinnissy, is somethin' ye want te be in whin ye're out ave it and out ave it whin ye're in. The club habit ye conthract Frishman year whin ye jine ivirything in sight from stoodents te the Consumers' League. 'Tis due te a feelin' that ye must belong te ivirything goin', or ye won't be a social success. Oh, 'tis not peculiar te Vassar gurls bein' one ave thim touches ave nater that me frind, Hogan, says makes the whole worruld kin. Ye say ye jine thim fer religious, er philanthropic, er educational purposes; but it is all one in the end. Ye cut the meetin' and pay the dues whin ye can't avoid the triserer, unlis 'tis an eatin' club, whin ye attind reg'lar. They've all sorts ave r-reforums goin' on now, an' I'm thinkin' ave takin' a hand mesilf with an Anti-Club Club. 'Tis outrageous te think ave all the inergy goin' te waste in callin' meetin's, readin' minutes, moovin' first that the number prisint constitoot a quorum, an' thin that the club be ripresinted as usual in the VASSARION. But 'twould be no use. Ye might as well thry te abolish commincement spaches. No. 'Twill always be as it was whin me frind Hogan whrote those famous worruds ave his—"Ave makin' many clubs there is no end, an' many meetin's are a weariness te the

Off across the laden Hudson,
In the winey Autumn air,
On beyond the quiet valley,
Where the tawny fields lie bare,
Where the mountains loom protecting
In the blue that's rest of heart;
Up the climbing, wooded hill-side,
Through a land of mystic art,
Colors deep with harvest meaning
Give their message to our lives;
From the haunted, wind-crisped waters,
Love remembered, love derives.

All Hallowe'en came 'round one night,
  Of course we had a ball,
And some went over to the Gym

AIR : "Louisiana Lize."

Three glad years in Vassar here,
We've lived and loved together,
1901. 1901.
And through all that time we've known
There was a girl among us—
One girl only—like to none—
All down the sunny days departed,
Margaret, you've ever been true-hearted.
Only girl to lead your loyal class ;
Queen of 1901. Till time shall pass
To you. To you
Will 1901 be true.
For you the best we have to offer,
Queen of our class ;
Yours all the love we have to proffer
Till time shall pass.
Loyal the hearts that proudly crown you,
Loyal for aye !
Margaret you only
Have all the love of 1901 to-day
And for aye, all the way,
Through the whole wide world we stray.

The Work of the Alumnæ.

That the Associate Alumnæ of Vassar College held its first meeting in 1871 is a fact which has very little interest to an undergraduate; but, as the same girl accompanies her friends about her college home and points out the different objects of interest, has she not a little pride in explaining that the gymnasium was built by her older Vassar sisters? Can she mount the observatory steps where Maria Mitchell looks out upon her and not remember that the Alumnæ have made the name and fame of that honored woman imperishable by an endowment of the professorship first held by her? Yet these are but passing impressions, and the Vassar girl, though she often sings, "Than our Alums, more quoted for wit and enterprise," gives little thought to what this may mean to her until senior year threatens to precipitate her into the ranks of these same "old Alums.," and she begins to wonder what may be expected of her special talents when once a member of the organization. In her last college days, filled with regret at leaving Alma Mater, and desirous of retaining her connection with the vital progress of the college, she is enthusiastically eager to pledge her energy to the future of Vassar. How shall she commence to bear her share in working for its welfare? One direct way is provided, as her diploma admits her to membership in the Associate Alumnæ, whose avowed object is "to promote the interests of Vassar College." She will, perhaps, regard this as putting her light under a bushel, since, in a large society, only the few are prominent. But let her meditate awhile on what the members of this society, in united effort, have done for the college she longs to benefit, and see whether she may not be able to admit that her efforts may have most weight and accomplish most in the end when added to those already under way. The answer to her query can only be given by showing what the

Can any other college organization furnish as substantial a record as that of the Associate Alumnæ of Vassar College? Beginning with scholarships, three of which, amounting in value to $18,000.00, have been raised by the association, progress was made to building a gymnasium for about $30,000.00 and endowing a professorship for $50,000.00. Then came a biological laboratory from a section of the association, and last a gift of $10,000.00 worth of books for the library, the total sum representing the united action of the body, and not taking into account the many constant, beautiful and valuable individual and class gifts to Vassar's equipment, which contribute so powerfully in demonstrating the loyal strength of her daughters.

These results are what the Associate Alumnæ have to offer as the outcome of their endeavor "to promote the interests of Vassar College," and these have been attained by means of the only real working committee of the association—the Endowment Committee. Every alumna is communicated with by the committee each year, and the continued annual contributions of the many have enabled the Vassar Alumnæ to make gifts to the college, which have made them remarkable among like organizations, and have been the cause of many inquiries from other associations as to the method by which so much material benefit can be acquired. This is the field into which every Vassar graduate enters when her diploma confers upon her all the rights of a member of the Associate Alumnæ, and where, as an individual or a concerted worker, the opportunity is hers to expand to the utmost any desires to uplift or benefit her Alma Mater.

ADA THURSTON, '80.

Within the Decade.

In former days people summed up in more or less leisurely fashion the progress of institutions, manners and customs during the preceding twenty-five or fifty years; but now so rapid is the pace set by the world that it reflects its momentum upon reviews and a decade is considered none too short a time in which to trace marked changes in the management, appearance and progress of Vassar. And this opinion is sustained by the facts. The freshman of last September, ushered into handsomely furnished reception rooms, welcomed by upperclassmen, having all the red tape of entrance entwined with the flowers of cordiality and good cheer, must have had very different feelings from those of the freshman of ten years ago, when she entered a parlor of extremely neutral tone, bordered on the sides with the furniture that now stretches along the middle corridors on the second and third floors, and waited in awed and uncomfortable silence until the several offices were opened for necessary formalities..

The little red-covered hand-books of to-day prepared by the Y. W. C. A., which contain so many items of useful information and genial hints of "how not to seem fresh" were quite unknown. Instead, the earlier freshman received from the hands of the then Lady Principal, in conjunction with a somewhat searching question as to her religious proclivities, a little book entitled "Directions for the Student," and a printed card of the college hours. The former contained such items as "No student may rise and study before half-past six without the consent of the Resident Physician," and "Students will go to the public parlors only when summoned by the Lady Principal, to whom all visitors are first announced," directions which were not hard to follow, owing to natural inclination against the former and lack of attractiveness of the latter. Another rule, however, was much harder to enforce and dire were the struggles of the President of the Students' Association with the unruly new members of the college who would not retire to all too often brightly burning at ten o'clock. Self-government was still in the experimental stage, having only the winter before superseded the block system, which had in turn displaced the corridor teacher system. Nothing, perhaps, shows more clearly the progress of the student body, the steady gain in self-control and in obedience to the educated will of the majority than does the history of self-government, which, in spite of its many mistakes and sometimes its abuse, has passed from the stage of experiment to the status of assured existence, with more and more power over the social life of the college and which is recognized as one of the strongest factors in the regulation of that life.

From time to time the freshmen of a decade ago were called together and instructed for their souls' good on points of table and college etiquette and on the dangers of undue emotional admiration. The adjacent city must have greatly improved in morals and government during these last years; for at that time no freshman could go to town without first seeking permission from the Lady Principal and stating her plans in detail. On Sunday mornings the wearing of tea gowns was permitted and even the lilies of the field might have been hard pressed in competition, while Solomon surely was outshone in the variety of style and color of the sweeping robes.

For many years the seniors enjoyed the prerogative of senior trains, first worn at the opening of the senior parlor; but when the fashions of the outside world demanded trailing skirts and freshmen included them as a matter of course in their wardrobes, the seniors, in despair, relinquished the privilege. Not that the underclassmen of that day failed in due respect to the seniors. The custom of granting precedence in entering the elevator was even more conscientiously observed than now. A certain low table in Room J was theirs alone whereon to rest between dances. It was a bold underclassman who ventured near the ethics corner of the library; and on the Sunday evenings in winter, between tea and prayers, when, by time-honored precedent, the seniors occupied the main stairways leading from the reception hall to the chapel, others who wished to ascend or descend for any purpose humbly made use of the fire-wall or transverse stairways.

spring vacation the time was changed to a quarter past, so that the lengthening days and the beautiful sunsets might be enjoyed by all. That was the favorite hour for walking around the campus or gathering at the head of or on the shallow stone steps of the two flights of stairs that, meeting each other half-way down, led from the second story to the ground.

The present library building was not then on paper even and the rooms that are now used for periodicals and public documents with the one connecting them formed one long library, which, with its arched ceiling and sense of space, its rows of west windows flooded in the afternoon with sunset light, impressed the freshmen of that day as a noble, scholastic, old-world seeming place.

We boasted of no other dormitory, then, but the main building. The ground whereon stand Strong Hall and Raymond House and the fast-growing new dormitory was part of the daisy field where the sophomores picked their last gift of love to the seniors. Recitation rooms, except those for art, music and the sciences, were scattered along the first three floors of Main ; so that the ten minutes between each recitation afforded ample time for social converse, bolstering up weak sisters who went in a state of general unpreparedness to the second division and receiving the same help from others in time of need. The sophomores pointed with pride to the last new building, the Alumnæ Gymnasium, the expense of whose massive doors they had helped to defray, so complete in its appointments and so commodious in its dimensions. The following year, when the college became so crowded that some practice rooms in Music Hall had to be pressed into service as students' apartments, great sympathy was expressed for the unfortunate freshmen occupants and the Y. W. C. A. gave them a special reception later in the year because they were "so out of it."

One would scarcely think that the midwinter examination time could change in any of its grim details; but on Thursday of that week occurred the Day of Prayer for Colleges, which was observed as a holiday. There were several religious services but, as all were voluntary, the attendance was rather slim and it was noted that the examination papers on Friday generally showed a thorough review of the subjects which they covered.

With the second semester came the study of elocution for the freshmen. They met one hour a week in the evening to practice different intonations of "Have you seen anything of my parasol, my dear?" and to indulge in deep respirations, all too frequently broken by giggles and downright bursts of was very soon removed from the curriculum. Indeed, one of the greatest changes in the whole decade, one by which the pulse of the college can be best taken and its health and vigor noted, is that in the curriculum. To be sure, one scarcley feels like agreeing with the professor who, with more gallantry than exactness, recently remarked that all that was necessary for admission ten years ago was for the candidate to present herself with a smile. The ones who did present themselves at that time felt little like smiling, and soon found other qualifications were in demand than those possessed by the Cheshire cat. Without doubt, however, the entrance requirements have gained in uniformity, standard and stringency. The decision to abolish the Schools of Art and Music, with the consequent elimination of a large number of students below the standard of the freshman class, has abundantly proved its wisdom. The number of elective courses has more than trebled in the decade, while several new lines of study have been added to the curriculum.

Amid all these changes, is it possible to find any welcome similarities? Any good things that the college has held fast to, recognizing that its vitality and power lay in the continued possession of such? Yes, can be answered more than once to this question.

The ten years have brought no change in the Head of the college; the one to whose wise administration, sane counsel and almost prophetic foresight, the steady growth and achievement of ideals have been due in so great a degree; whom the undergraduates respect and fervently admire and to whom the alumnæ look up with ever-increasing gratitdue and affection as the full measure of their debt to him and to the Alma Mater presses upon them.

And the college spirit is the same—that potent, pervasive, indefinable thing that one feels as one shouts at the games or applauds at the hall plays, or glows with pride in others' honors; that possesses one in the friendly walks or merry drives, or in the cosy gatherings in college rooms; the spirit that, best of all, as one walks alone through the orchard, up Sunset Hill to where the pines,

> "Though twilight all the lowland blurs,
> Hold sunset in their ruddy stems," grips the heart-strings and contracts the throat as the full sense of possession rolls over one with all its opportunities and all its obligations. That spirit is still there and, while Vassar has it, no decades of changes can really separate alumnæ and students united by such a living bond.

"I certainly never hope to be more tired," groaned Lou, as she sank into the Morris chair; "but I guess every last thing is in that suit-case; and, oh, won't I sleep when I get home!"

"You think you will: but you won't," returned Eleanor, grimly. "What with Christmas and clothes to be had and all that, I generally work harder at home during that blessed seventeen days than any time here. But I guess we are through now—oh, Lord!" And she dropped despairingly upon the couch. "Lou," she gasped to her startled room-mate, "do you know we haven't touched the pictures and things yet?"

"Pictures? Oh, dear! Well, I won't! There, now! I'd rather pay any amount of tack-bills in the future than move again before we start."

"Oh, no, dear; now come on," said Eleanor, coaxingly. "I shall have to if you don't. I can't afford another such bill as met my horrified gaze last spring—'For damage to wall, $5.60!'" Then, as Lou still remained inert, but for a lazy shaking of her head, she went over and dragged her to her feet.

"Come along now, Sukey; we won't fuss with all the little fiddling ones. They're up with pins, which don't count. But all the pictures must come down. You ought to help when you were the one that insisted that wires were an eye-sore and an abomination before the Lord," she added, reproachfully.

"Well," sighed Lou, "I loathe you; but I will sacrifice myself."

It didn't take so very long after all. Within twenty minutes every picture was down, and soon after they were piled neatly upon the closet floor.

"Hope you're pleased," said Lou, viciously. "Cheerful-looking room to come back to, and then all this stuff to go up again."

"You'll be glad when every one else is groaning over bills for tack-holes," said Eleanor, with the serenity of conscious virtue.

They were going north together and had just time to get lunch and make their train, by which time Lou had recovered her naturally sweet temper.

"It was much better to take those pictures down," she confessed, reflectively, after the train had been in motion some time. "We'd used so many tacks, and lots of them were large." Here she gasped, choked by a thought too awful for utterance. Then, grabbing Eleanor's arm, she burst into convulsive laughter. "Oh, my dear," she gurgled; "do you know what we did?"

"Did! Did when?" demanded the mystified Eleanor. "Stop laughing, idiot, and tell me."

"Oh, dear, those tacks—don't you see?" said Lou, faintly: then went off again into gales of laughter.

"What do you mean? Tacks! Oh, heavens!" And Eleanor subsided as the horrible thought struck her also. "No! it isn't possible. We couldn't have been such fools. All those pictures down—"

"And not a tack taken out of the walls," laughed Lou. "Each one fairly staring the men in the face when they go round to count them. They'll be so obliged to your thoughtfulness, Eleanor."

"Shut up!" returned Eleanor, weakly. "It's no laughing matter. $5.60 last time. I see about $8.00 apiece this year. Talk to me about 'a stitch in time.' I'll never be far-sighted again."

When I want to make a class,
Or a train,
When I simply can't cut chapel
Once again,
When I want to get somewhere,
Not one minute left to spare,
Then I sit me down and wait, and wait, and wait—
In a car that's on a switch I sit and wait.
Yes, on the switch I wait,
And patience cultivate,
While I sadly watch the moments slipping by,
I miss my train and class;
Students' calls me up—alas!
And that wretched side-tracked car's the reason why.

Once the Lodge clock told the time—
So they say—
Till it tried to time the cars
On their way,
Then its movements were so slow
That it soon forgot to go,
For it always had to wait, and wait, and wait—
While the car was on the switch it had to wait.
So now regardless quite,
Of clockless students' plight,
Or of time that is so swiftly slipping by,
The Lodge clock stands quite still;
And there's another ill,
Of which the side-tracked car's the reason why.

The Properly Scholarly Attitude

The poet pursues his beautiful theme;
The preacher his golden beatitude;
And I run after a vanishing dream—
The glittering, will-o'-the-wispish gleam
Of the properly scholarly attitude—
The highly desirable, the very advisable,
The hardly acquirable, properly scholarly attitude.

I envy the savage without any clothes,
Who lives in a tropical latitude;
It's little of general culture he knows.
But then he escapes the worrisome woes
Of the properly scholarly attitude—
The unceasingly sighed over, wept over, cried over,
The futilely died over, properly scholarly attitude.

I work and I work till I nearly am dead,
And could say what the watchman said—that I could!
But still, with a sigh and a shake of the head,
"You don't understand," it is ruthlessly said,
"The properly scholarly attitude—"
The aye to be sought for, wrought for and fought for,
The ne'er to be caught for, properly scholarly attitude.

I really am sometimes tempted to say
That it's merely a glittering platitude;

I suppose this story really ought not to be told. It may give friendly critics a wrong impression of Vassar students, and it may lead anxious editors to distrust Vassar news. For the benefit of these it may be said that such a thing never happened but this once; that it would not have happened then if anyone could have foreseen the possibility of it, and that, since forewarned is forearmed, it will never happen again. With such precautionary statements, perhaps, I may tell the story. Luella won't like its appearing in print. She is rather sensitive on the point; but I can square it with Luella—and here is the story.

One day Luella read the notices on the bulletin in Rockefeller. "I don't know how I happened to do such a thing," she said to me when she was telling me about it afterwards. "I never do read that bulletin. No one does but people who have interviews and 'res' . . . : but I read it that day—read it with care and thoroughness, and that particular notice took my eye."

The notice that took Luella's eye was to this effect:

"Will all those who are interested in newspaper work and wish to do newspaper correspondence please meet on Wednesday, between fourth hour and luncheon, in Room 23."

Why the thought of being a newspaper correspondent should have appealed to Luella I don't know, for, as you will see later, she hadn't an ounce of the true newspaper spirit in her. I think the name took her fancy, and then a little ticket she had seen in my room had interested her greatly—a little yellow ticket, which certified in a very official manner that I was special correspondent for a certain paper. Luella said she thought this ticket a charming thing to possess.

"It opens up such possibilities," she affirmed. Whenever there is a fire, or a railroad wreck, or any little excitement like that, you can go and investigate all the gory details, and when the police try to send you away with the rest of the crowd, you can produce your little yellow Luella," I said, "you are more kinds of an idiot than I can name in a day. I've never once used that foolish little piece of card board."

But Luella only thought that I was very slow, and when she saw the newspaper notice on the bulletin board her imagination was fired afresh. She determined at once to meet on Wednesday, become a newspaper correspondent, and own a little yellow ticket of her own.

On Wednesday, therefore, at the end of the fourth hour, Luella went to Room 23. There were a good many other girls there besides herself, and Luella interviewed some of them on their reasons for wanting to do newspaper work. Some laughed and answered, laconically, "Money;" some explained earnestly that it was "awfully good practice in writing," and some said that they were thinking of making reporting the business of their lives, and they thought this was a good time to try it on a small scale and see how they liked it. Luella advanced her theory of the little yellow ticket as the key of Life; but no one seemed to sympathize very much, and before she could explain its advantages in detail, an English instructor came in and began to talk to them. She told them that the main object of the work was to keep alums all over the country informed on college matters, and the next object was to give girls practical training in writing. She explained that, incidentally, some money might be made, but not much. Yellow tickets she did not mention. Then she went on to say that the English department had charge of the work, and all letters were to be taken to her for inspection before they were sent. "Where there are so many inexperienced people writing you can see the necessity for that," she said. Then she asked if the girls had any papers they were thinking of writing for. If they had, would they come and tell her about them, and if they hadn't, would they look some up and let her know when they decided. And were there any questions? And if not, that was all.

Luella was somewhat disappointed. She had hoped that a newspaper would be furnished at once for which she could begin to write, and which, what was more important, would immediately present her with a little yellow ticket. However, since this was not the case, she began to look about her to find a newspaper for herself. Following some private advice of the instructors she chose a small town, Wharton, where she had once spent the summer visiting some cousins the names of whose papers she knew. There were three papers in Wharton, and Luella wrote to all of them. "I never dreamt they would all accept," she said. But they did, and the reason was this:

Wharton was a small town, which ran three newspapers, while it had patronage enough to support only one. It was becoming more evident every day that this was the case, and that two of the papers would have to go. But which two? That was the question, and each of the papers was bent on showing that it was the one best fitted to survive. There was severe competition at every point—editorials, locals and advertisement—and each one of the editors where Luella's letter came seized on her offer as a new departure which would give his paper prestige over the others. You see there were enough alums and people in Wharton interested in the college to make the news readable. The upshot of the matter was that each of the papers accepted enthusiastically Luella's proposal to act as special correspondent, and Luella, seeing before her the vision of three little yellow tickets instead of one, wrote to each of them that she would be very glad to do the work. It is sufficiently evident now that Luella hadn't an ounce of the true newspaper spirit in her, or she would have seen the nefariousness of her conduct. "But I didn't," she assured me afterwards. "I only thought I would get some fun out of it and three little yellow tickets."

The fun began at once, both for Luella and the papers, but particularly for the papers. On Saturday evening of the week following The Star came out with a long letter written in Luella's most airy style, containing all the news of the college. It was headed: Doings of Vassar—Garnered by our Special Correspondent. The people of Wharton read it with great enjoyment. They said it was so nice to see a paper take an interest in something outside of the regular routine of murders, politics and local gossip, and that the Star was really a very clever paper—quite the cleverest paper in Wharton. The circulation of the Star increased perceptibly, and the editor held his head very high—until Tuesday. On Tuesday the Telegram appeared with its letter from Luella, headed: Vassar Notes—Events of Educational and Social Interest at Vassar, Described by our Special Correspondent. In this letter Luella was less airy and more serious and scholastic, and the people of Wharton said that the Star treated things too lightly; that for real, solid news and views they would take the Telegram. Whereat the Star editor hung his head and the Telegram editor smiled a superior smile and looked haughty—until Thursday. On Thursday the Enterprise came out with its letter. The headlines this time read: Vassar Girls at Work and Play—Told by our Special Correspondent. This letter was rather more personal than the other two. It was—Luella told me, and she had the grace to blush—it was "chatty." The people of Wharton liked it immensely. They said the Enterprise does get hold of such interesting lots of news; little intimate details that the other papers didn't seem to think worth printing. Then it was the Enterprise editor's turn to be proud.

But even he was not altogether happy, and his two colleagues were furious. They all felt that the other correspondents were a little better than their own, and they all wrote to Luella, asking her to make her letters a little more like those appearing in the other papers. They enclosed copies of the letters so that she could see what they were like. They also implored her to get the news in as quickly as possible so that, as the Star man amicably expressed it, "we can break the back-bone of the other correspondents!" "The dear man," said Luella, grinning when she told me about it, "inviting me to break my own back-bone! and he was so enthusiastic about it, too!"

Luella was very conscientious, and did her best to act fairly by all the papers. She distributed "scoops" with great fairness, so that no one of the papers could claim that it was neglected. At Mohonk time she had some trouble with the Star. It was the year that the Mohonk trip was postponed three times on account of the weather. For three weeks Luella wrote a description of the trip for the Star, and for three weeks she wrote contradictions for the other papers. "I didn't mean to," she said, "but I had to write the Star account ahead of time, and then, when the trip really didn't come off, I thought it my duty to contradict the report in the other papers." The Telegram and the Enterprise commented so scathingly at this time over the unreliability of the Star news, Vassar and otherwise, that it nearly drove the Star out of business. The Star editor wrote a beseeching letter to Luella, asking her to be more careful. Luella promised, and by way of squaring things sent him a long account of a new building which had recently been given to the college. She told when it was going to be built, where it was going to be built and how it was going to be built. She told who gave the money, and what the faculty thought and what the students thought. In short, it was a very satisfactory letter, and it set the Star on its feet again, especially since in her Enterprise and Telegram letters Luella barely mentioned the new building and let it be understood that she had been unable to obtain fuller information. "Then," said Luella, "I got letters from the Telegram and Enterprise asking why in the world I couldn't get the information as well as the Star correspondent, and I had some difficulty in explaining."

Things went on in this way for some time, and Luella found it unusually amusing. "Why, I got letters from these poor, distracted papers nearly every week," she said, "and they were too funny for words." "And still you didn't know it was wrong?" I demanded. Luella shook her head. "It sounds incredible, I know, but such a thing never occurred to me: besides, I didn't know why they were so keen about Vassar news. I had no idea of the importance it had assumed."

But it had assumed importance, and most disproportionate importance. You must remember that Wharton was a small place, without much to talk about:

moreover, it happened to be out of a scandal at the time, and it seized on the miniature newspaper war going on in its midst with avidity. In point of view of news, editorials and advertisements the three papers were evenly matched, and so it came about that the fight narrowed down to Luella's Vassar letters. The people of the town recognized this, and each week read the three letters eagerly to see which paper came out ahead. The sporty young men of the town made bets about it, and the editors wrote letters to Luella, urging her not to allow herself to be beaten.

Luella kept the three papers just about neck and neck until March. Then, in a fit of absent-mindedness, she gave the Enterprise three beats in succession, The editors of the Star and the Telegram were deeply distressed. They each sat down and wrote long letters to Luella, and explained the situation to her. "Judge Danby, the leading citizen of Wharton, who has a niece at Vassar, has been heard to say," wrote the Star editor, "that if the Star keeps on falling behind in news he will have to stop his subscription, and his initiative will be followed by all the first families of Wharton. So, my dear Miss Wetherall," he implored, "please do your best not to let the Enterprise and Telegram correspondents get ahead of you." In closing he implied that if his paper went to the wall, he and his wife and three small children would starve. The editor of the Telegram wrote that he had been told that Colonel Branford, the leading citizen of Wharton, had said that the Telegram was altogether too slow, that he considered it a sign of inferiority when a paper let itself be beaten even on such a thing as Vassar news: that for his part he was more interested in Vassar news than in politics, and he thought he would have to limit his subscription to the Enterprise. "And if he does," added the Telegram editor, "every body else will." And he also implored Luella to beat the other two correspondents, and implied that he and his wife and six children would starve if she didn't.

When Luella got these letters and learned the true situation, she was appalled. Not knowing what else to do, she went on writing letters, apportioning the news with painful care. "It nearly gave me nervous prostration," she said. "It was so fearfully wearing to parcel out the news in their packages, and to feel that if they weren't quite even, two husbands, two wives and nine small children would be driven to starvation." It wasn't fun any more, and Luella soon had enough of it. It was then that she called me into her room, put up an engaged sign, and told me the whole story.

Now of course I had known that Luella was doing newspaper work. I had even known that she was writing for three newspapers, but that they were all in the same town had never occurred to me. How was any one to think of

"And so," said Luella, when she finished her story, "was it really wrong?"

"Wrong!" I exclaimed, and then gently but firmly I explained to her the absolute depravity and dishonesty of her conduct from a newspaper point of view. Luella was deeply impressed, and shook her head sorrowfully over her short-comings, but protested her innocence of wrong intention.

"But, Luella," I asked, "didn't the men tell you they would want your exclusive services?"

"They never hinted such a thing, though—" she reluctantly admitted, "now that I think of it, I told each one I would be his special correspondent. Perhaps they thought that meant exclusive?"

"Perhaps," I said grimly. Then another thought struck me. "Luella," I said, "did you take your letters to Miss Branson?" Miss Branson is the instructor in charge of the newspaper work.

"Yes," said Luella promptly.

"Well," I puzzled, "how did she let such a thing go on?"

"I don't believe she knew," reflected Luella. "She knew I had three papers, but she never remembered their names—much less the town they were in. I don't believe it occurred to her."

"No," I interrupted, "I don't believe it did, and now," I went on, "now you are in the hole, how are you going to get out?"

"Why!" cried Luella, "that's just what I want you to tell me."

I remained silent and severe.

"I might write and explain," Luella suggested blindly.

I was withering. "Oh, do," I said. "It would make a lovely story—one that all the newspapers could print. 'A Vassar Girl's Idea of Special Correspondence.' It would be awfully funny—so funny that all the city papers would copy it and improve on it. Oh, do explain; it would make things pleasant all around—for you and the English department, and the college and every one."

"It seems," said Luella meekly, "it seems that this thing is becoming serious."

"It's about time you realized that," I retorted. "Now, I should advise you to tell Miss Branson the whole thing, and do as she says."

Then, having done my duty and impressed Luella with the enormity of her crime, I amused myself the rest of the evening reading the letters of Luella's editors, which undoubtedly were too funny for words.

I waited with interest to see what the result of Luella's interview with Miss Branson would be. Luella came from it straight to my room.

"Miss Branson was shocked," she announced; "but awfully amused. She thinks it will be best for me to stop writing to all three. She says that it is a little too conspicuous and important a position for Vassar news to have, even in a small place like Wharton. So, now, I'm going to write to my dear old pals (Luella's pet name for the long-suffering editors) that I must sever my connection with them."

"What reason are you going to give?" I asked.

"Oh, I don't know—sickness, work, something—my, but I'll be glad to get rid of the thing," and Luella went off, rejoicing.

In about ten minutes she was back, shrieking with laughter and waving four letters.

"They are all going out of business," she gasped; "all three of my dear old pals." She thrust the letters upon me. "The strain of it was too much for them, and the returns too uncertain, so they've sold out to a young man—to my cousin, Jimmy Rives." Luella dropped into a chair, gasping, "They each told him my name in confidence, and recommended me over the other correspondents. Jimmy is simply convulsed."

"Did he tell?" I demanded.

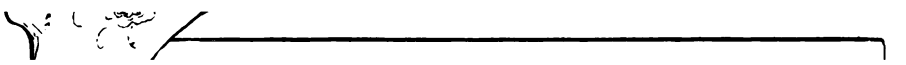
"Of course not. But he wants to know what kind of newspaper morals they teach here."

Then Luella went off again into peals of laughter, and reading the letters of the poor old pals, thanking her so sweetly for her working, and hoping so sincerely that she would get the position on the new paper over the other correspondents, I gave way and joined her.

"Dear me," said Luella, when she got breath enough to talk, "I knew Jimmy was looking for a paper, but I never thought he would buy the Wharton ones, though it's a perfectly natural thing for him to do, seeing he lives there."

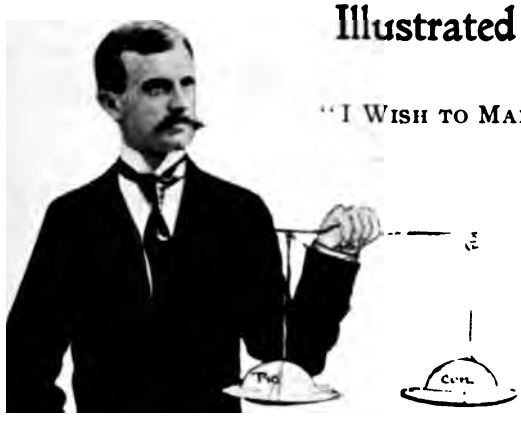
"You're well out of it now, anyway," I said.

"Yes," said Luella, with a reminiscent grin; "yes, I'm out of it now. It was a lot of fun—but a lot of work, too. Think of the time I spent cultivating three distinct styles, and the worry I've had dividing the news evenly. But the particular joke," said Luella, sadly, "the particular joke is that I never got a little yellow ticket. All else I can survive but that—that is too much. I think," said Luella reflectively, "that I'll go out of the business too. I agree with my pals, the strain is too great and the returns too uncertain."



Illustrated Methods of Instruction

"I Wish to Make No Statements"

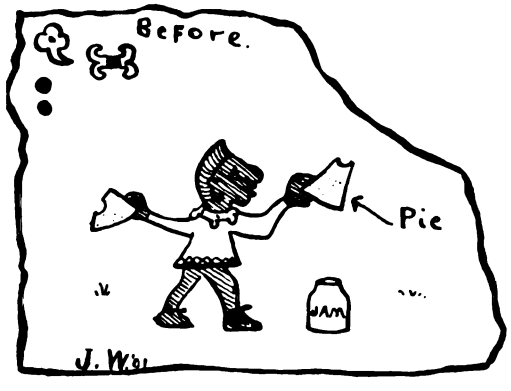


Who hits the nail of Truth upon the head?
"I, with my little hammer," Prexy said.

I sing the praise of fishing,
But not in common brooks,
Where thoughtless little fishes
Are caught with worms and hooks;
Oh, no! I seek for bigger game
Than any fish that's caught,
For with a question mark for bait
I angle after thought.

Sometimes I feel like him who for a whale
Went fishing in his mother's little pail.

Illustrated Ethics for Kindergarten Children



The Primitive Pie or the Origin of Conscience

A primitive tribe made a primitive pie
And went on a primitive hunt,
Neglecting to leave any guard for the pie,
A foolishly primitive stunt;
For a primitive boy yearned after the pie,
And when all the tribe was away
To the primitive pantry he quietly stole,
And while the sun shone he made hay.

Now, a primitive pie isn't good for a boy,
And he soon had a
primitive pain,
Which got more severe it
is perfectly clear,
When the tribe to their home came again.

Now, what were the lessons the tribe and the boy
From this little circumstance brought?

The tribe learned caution in guarding its pies,
And the boy learned not to be caught.
But conscience and morals can they be involved?
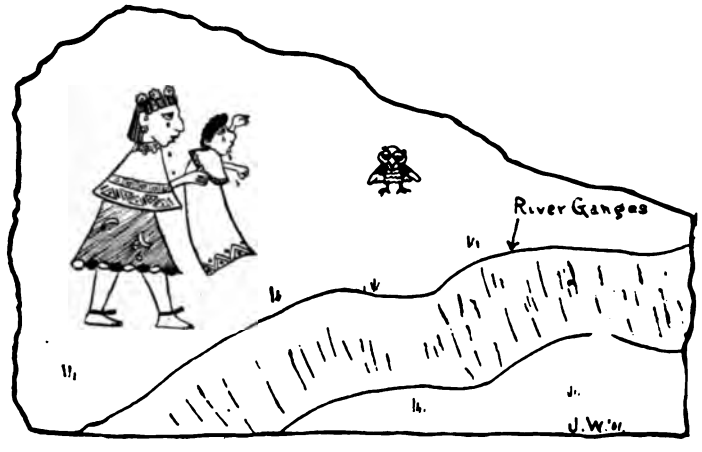
Indeed, no! They surely cannot.

The Woman by the Ganges; or, Natural Sanctions



This, the woman by the Ganges,
That, her baby in her arms,
This the question—Shall she drown it?
Shall she keep it safe from harms?
If she throws it in the river
She will soon be brutalized;
If she keeps it her religious
Life will then be paralyzed.
Poor old woman by the Ganges,
Things are in a horrid mix,
Baby in or out of river,
Just the same she's in a fix.

The Cactus and the Lily

A cactus can't grow where a lily can,
And I never thought that it could;
A lily can't grow where a cactus can,
And I'd like to know why it should;
Yet the facts I would have you remember, because
They show uniform action of uniform laws.

A TOAST

Here's to you, Smiths'! You feed the hungry well,
And fain are we our gratitude to tell.
Here's to you, Smiths'—A long life and a hale!
We drink your health in Clicquot—ginger ale.

Rhymes for Sub-Freshmen

Mrs. McGlynn

Where lunch-eon brings salt mack-er-el,
Al-though 'twould rhyme I'd hate to tell.
The lan-gu-age I in se-cret ut-ter,
Mak-ing a meal of bread and but-ter.
But when the col-lege meal is thin,
I hie me down to Mrs. McGlynn,
And then she gives me some-thing nice—
Waf-fles hot or straw-ber-ry ice;
Chick-en broth or chick-en sand-wich,
Chick-en fried or eggs and ham, which
Are the best you ever ate;
And then there's cake of choc-o-late,
Or any flav-or that you wish,
And caff mos-sy'—a lovely dish.
Now, just sup-pose she were not there—
Mrs. McGlynn and her bill of fare.

The Night Watchman

To be an el-e-va-tor boy!

The Cook

Now, to the cook a verse we'll give,
For with-out him we could not live.
It's up to him to cook each meal;
And though, per-haps, you some-times feel
You'd rath-er cook than eat them, still
He does his best with right good will.
So don't se-vere-ly crit-i-cise
His Sun-day teas and rhu-barb pies.

The Centipede

Know you the cent-i-pede, my child—
An in-sect that is very wild,
And makes you wild-er when it falls
Up-on your head from off the walls,
Or crawls with all its hun-dred feet
Up-on your couch's snow-y sheet.
We do not love the cent-i-pede.
We shun his com-pa-ny, in-deed

My Little Pals and Me

[illegible]

"Oh! I wad like to ken," to my little pals says I.
"Why some's Phi Beta Kappa, some Beta Kappa Phi.
And what's the middle difference twixt the letters A and D?"
"It's gey and easy spieren'," says my little pals to me.

"Oh! I wad like to ken," to my little pals says I.
"Why sermons are sae unco' queer or else sae unco' dry.
An' though a preacher's preachin', why he can't talk sensibly?"
"It's gey and easy spieren'," says my little pals to me.

"Oh! I wad like to ken," to my little pals says I.
"Why a bit joke of the students makes the faculty near die,
And a wee sma' celebration makes them huffy as can be?"
"It's gey and easy spieren'," says my little pals to me.

"Oh! I wad like to ken," to my little pals says I.
"Why, we can't please friendly critics, no matter how we try,
And if they're just as perfect as they would have us be?"
"It's gey and easy spieren'," says my little pals to me.

"Oh! I wad like to ken," to my little pals says I.
"The reason of the case and the wherefore of the why
Wi' many anither riddle brings the tear into my e'e?"

They just disappeared without sign or sound—
The coffee and salad and cream.

She knew very well that they couldn't walk—
The coffee and salad and cream;
The occurrence occasioned a good deal of talk
Of coffee and salad and cream.
It was all very sad, but certainly true;
It carries a moral for me and for you.
Refreshments to whom refreshments are due,
Of coffee and salad and cream.

The Modest Freshman

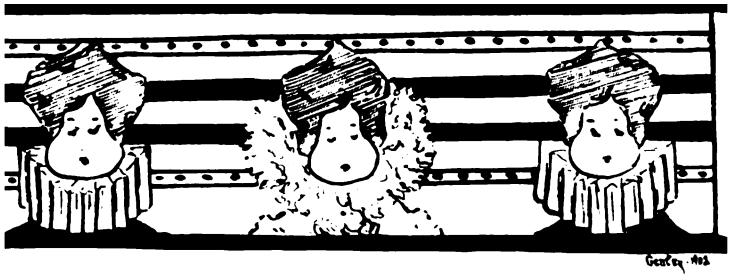
"Is swimming taught in the Gym.?" she asked—
This modest freshman, with eyes downcast.
The instructor nodded and answered yes.
"I'd like to take lessons there, I guess,"
In a weak little voice, said the freshman small.
"And do you know how to swim at all?"
The instructor asked in a kindly way.
"A little? About how much should you say?"
The freshman blushed and hung her head.
"Not more than a mile and a half," she said.

Obviously Not

Lake Song

The spring air's wild and sweet, my dear,
  The spring air's gay and soft.
The waters laugh to greet, my dear,
  The sun's kiss, bright and oft.

Away wi' the worry o' care, my dear,



Sept. 19—The Committee for Reception wonders why
The number of its members is so high.

Sept. 20—But 1904 appearing brave and large,
Committing varied woes unto its charge,

Sept. 21—It ponders now how one to every score
Can pilot each forlorn girl to her door.

Sept. 22—His annual "Job" now Mr. Downing plays,
'Twill be repeated by request in June's hot days.

Sept. 26—In concrete case to Mrs. McGlynn's we see
The pathway of the hungry hard to be.

Sept. 29—Dwellers on first remove their bureau-tops,
Nor toil nor screw-driver appals nor stops,

Sept. 30—Not even when
They put them back again.

Oct. 3—Our "gentleman principal" goes off to Smith—
Those promised ethics cuts aren't all a myth.

Oct. 4—The posters summon all to register
On first, instructions given not to err.

Oct. 6—A game of twenty questions—answers queer—
The fitness of each citizen makes clear.

Oct. 13—The Democratic candidate addressed
A meeting, with his characteristic zest.

Oct. 16—The parlor had none yet of any sort—
Still Juniors could its color-scheme report.

Oct. 31—At dinner 1901 receives with glee
From 1902 some blank-books neat to see.

Nov. 6—The college votes, expects the nation to endorse,
It does—but celebration's checked per force.

Nov. 7—The final wave of ardor in third hour

Nov. 14—The gasman's asked: "Please put a mantle o'er
My desk three feet by inches six—no more."

Nov. 29—Another "interim" we gladly find
Comes in to Phil and Thanksgiving combined.

Dec. 1—A few, some brothers, cousins, still remain
Before the college looks itself again.

Dec. 3—Miss Jackson, summoned by official whim,
Removed from office, over cuts from gym.

Dec. 4—Vassarion folk in similar case—a dash
For old excuses—explanations rash.

Dec. 10—The scapegoats of reform restored again
The rest now go to gym—well, once in ten.

Jan. 8—We're back again, alas! with limp and crutch
We've had some Christmas fun—not much.

Jan. 10—In C. and C. we're greatly shocked, surprised,
To give our time to crime we're all advised.

Jan. 11—Tooth-powder in an avalanche, the mail
Absorbs—its coming imprecations hail.

IN TOUCH WITH THE WORLD

The man who reads CURRENT HISTORY knows exactly what is transpiring in every centre of the world's activity. He knows the "when," "where," and "why" of every event that influences the destiny of nations. He sees at a glance the subtle movements that contribute to the conditions of trade. He discerns with true perspective the epoch making features of his time, and he can do so as clearly, as quickly, as easily as the man who turns from one continent to another by a simple touch of the hand on a globe of the world.

CURRENT HISTORY is edited and published for "the man who wants to know."

CURRENT HISTORY

applies the reducing glass of judicious selection, concentrated information, crisp analysis, so that in a few minutes of time the reader may take a comprehensive glance and know accurately what is going on—not in one corner of the earth only—but in every part of the world.

"To every one who desires a permanent record of contemporaneous events," says Hon. Wm. Jennings Bryan, "Current History is absolutely necessary."

It includes among its constant subscribers many of the most eminent men of the day. Diplomatists at Washington have copies sent not only to themselves, but to their attaches. Business men of eminence regard it as a valuable aid.

Its cost is only 15cts. The information a single issue will give would warrant the expenditure of ten times the amount. Its cost is but a fraction of its worth.

Yearly Subscription, $1.50

On sale at News Stands

SPECIAL OFFER For a limited time a three months' trial subscription will be sent for 25 cents.

JUNE

The time has come, the Senior said,
To scrutinize my purse,
To buy my Senior photographs
And watch my cash disperse,
To pay my dues, buy class-day gowns
And heaven knows what worse.

The time has come, the Senior sighed,
To scrutinize my head,
To find what notions linger there
Of what my Profs. have said,
To cram up all my little notes
And wish that I were dead.

I am delighted with the position in New Brunswick which you have found for me, and I fully appreciate your help. You took my name only a few weeks ago and have now located me in a position more desirable in every way than the one I have resigned. This is certainly better fortune than I had hoped for.

College Hill

RIVERVIEW MILITARY ACADEMY

66th YEAR

RIVERVIEW gives boys a thorough preparation for College, for the Government Schools and for Business Life. Riverview students are found in all the Colleges and Scientific Schools. Riverview graduates are filling prominent positions in private life . . . . . .

THE SCHOOL

which is now located at Riverview was organized and established in 1836, on College Hill, and known as the Poughkeepsie Collegiate School. In the spring of 1867 the change of location was made, the school marching in a body from College Hill to Riverview . . . . . .

THE INSTRUCTORS,

nine of whom are residents, are men of experience in their departments . . . . .

MILITARY INSTRUCTION

is under the charge of a United States Army Officer, detailed by the Secretary of War . . . . . .

Riverview (main building)

THE BUILDINGS

of the school are beautifully located on high ground overlooking the Hudson. The school has a large Athletic Field. Careful attention has been given to drainage, lighting and ventilation. It is a family school; every boy comes in daily contact with the Principal and his family . . . . . .

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION

is given by the Chaplain, who is assistant pastor of one of the city churches. He meets every student and has a personal interest in him . . . . . .

Short Story Writing

By Charles Raymond Barrett, Ph.B.
12mo, Cloth, $1.00

A PRACTICAL treatise on the art of the short story, designed to present concretely the rules of that art. It is a working manual, not a collection of untried theories. It tells how to write a story with reference to the requirements of contemporary editors.

"Both an interesting and a useful book. While it is concerned with the special application of rhetorical principles to a particular department of literary art, it carries a general application that all literary workers may profit by, as in its chapters on Titles, Style and the Labor of Authorship."—Outlook.

"The book can hardly fail to be of much practical assistance to the novice in short story writing."—Review of Reviews.

"The volume is one which cannot fail to help the ambitious young story teller."—Toledo Blade.

"A volume of definition, criticism and instruction. Sensible and based upon careful and intelligent study. Young writers will do wisely to read it and heed it."—Congregationalist.

"PERFECT COLD CREAM"

Is not to be compared with the ordinary article, which is usually grainy, lumpy and soon becomes rancid. D. & R. Perfect Cold Cream possesses a peculiar velvet-like smoothness not found in any other. No Cream, either American or European, equals D. & R. in purity and elegance. Its snowy whiteness results from its perfect purity. It does not contain lead, zinc, bismuth or any other cosmetic substances. It does not contain glycerine. D. & R. never becomes rancid. It is prepared by our improved scientific process. It is a distinct toilet triumph. When applied daily with gentle massage, it clears, nourishes and keeps the skin soft and youthful in appearance. It is a true scientific skin food—"the kind that keeps"—because it is antiseptically prepared and free from impurities and inferior substances which end in rancidity.

A TOUR ROUND THE WORLD

Is incomplete if you have not made a trip on the celebrated Union Pacific Train, "The Overland Limited," which runs between Missouri River and California in fifteen hours quicker time than any other train. Fitted out in regal splendor. Of this train Admiral Beresford says:

"Why, I never saw anything like it, and then, too, this Dining Car System it is grand. The appointments of the Union Pacific Trains are a constant source of surprise to me."
